The agitation against the admission of the Utah polygamist, Roberts, to a seat in the House ought to be superfluous. There should be left behind, the sick were neglected, and the no need for an agitation to prevent such an outrage on decency and well were driven to needless slaughter.

It is the duty of the free American women outside to break their bonds.

As long as plural marriage was a local institution in Utah it was possible for people in other parts of the Union to shut their eyes to it. But in sending a man with three wives to legislate for the whole country the Mormon priesthood has made an issue that must be met. The American people will not have their laws made by transplanted Turks. Their answer to the insult offered to them by the shameless hierarchy prevailed in other times and places.
